Three million people across France downed their wine at midday on Thursday in protest of the government's new labour reform. The ban was organised on Facebook by a group named Les Patriotes ("The Patriots"). Other people protested with candles, yellow ribbons and water balloons. The number of French people taking part in the campaign was also very high. According to the Facebook page, 27 people joined the protest in Paris alone. The reason for their disappearance to the wine bar was that they were ashamed of themselves for being French.

ADVERTISEMENT The controversial labour reform bill brings some changes that are very welcome for some, such as the right to hire someone (who you don't need to pay tax for) for the first 20 hours of a 34-hour working week. But for other people, such as the French Socialist Party, the reform will lead to lower wages, to cuts in national holidays, and to a less favourable tax system. The protests across the country have also been justified by Christian white backlash. While in other parts of the world, they would see the protests as a representation of the majority and minorities, here they view the protests as a tool used by black Africans to intimidate and usurp white culture. The much-talked-about male tailors in the country were also upset and called on people not to wear any jeans or vests in public. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a vibration-damping device, and more particularly to a vibration-damping device for a package of an electronic appliance such as a camera. 2. Description of the Prior Art Conventionally, a vibration-damping device in the form of a triangular bellows is fitted on the outer periphery of a camera body to absorb vibrations produced in the camera. Such a bellows-type vibration-damping device is disclosed, for example, in Japanese Utility Model Preliminary Publication No. 61-23302. The conventional bellows-type vibration-damping device, however, requires large space for its protection. Further, it is quite costly, because it requires a complicated construction.

Future Gamer:
Angry Birds I've been on a rash of gaming purchases lately, namely because I'm reading a lot of interesting and relevant games and thought I should have them all on my gaming PC. This is what I got:

2. Angry Birds' Publisher:
Rovio -Price: ~$4.99
-Platform: All -Resolution:
Any -Gamer Rating: 8 out of 10 This is a very good game. There's really nothing like it in the market. The game mechanic is very clever and the graphics are wonderful, despite being funny. I'm already about halfway through it and I really can't put it down. The game is just that good. I do have a gripe about the game though, which is the location of the bird. We use a lot of outdoor games and the penguin takes up a lot of our outdoor space. Thankfully he doesn't have a laser cannon, but he does have a very loud and abrasive attack. It gets tiresome having to put the bird back far away from where it can pop up on our screen. I've had this game for about a month and already have many hours of gameplay, but I feel that it's going to go on for a little longer. It's fun while it's happening, but it's also a lot of work to get down a giant green bird. I'm sure that this game will be the new standard for the Angry Birds series for a very long time. I've also been playing a bit of Dynasty Warriors: Gundam with the TV in
